The ghosts that haunt America are the focus of this traveling group exhibition at the Minneapolis Institute of Art, which will investigate how paranormal interests have guided more than 100 artists, including Betye Saar and Grant Wood, from the 18th century until today. "You might expect to see images of ghosts in an exhibition exploring the supernatural—and you will," curator Robert Cozzolino wrote of the show. "But the primary thread that binds these diverse artists across generations leads to contact."
